Publishing Information

When the English-Language Development Standards for California Public Schools, Kindergarten Through Grade Twelve was adopted by the California State Board of Education in July 1999, the members of the State Board were the following: Robert L. Trigg, President; Kathryn Dronenburg, Vice-President; Marian Bergeson; Susan Hammer; Carlton J. Jenkins; Marion Joseph; Yvonne Larsen; Monica Lozano; Janet Nicholas; Vicki Reynolds; and Richard Weston.

This publication was edited by Faye Ong, working in cooperation with Lilia G. Sanchez, Consultant, Language Policy and Leadership Office. It was designed and prepared for printing by the staff of CDE Press, with the cover and interior design created and prepared by Juan D. Sanchez. Typesetting was done by Jeannette Huff. It was published by the California Department of Education, 1430 N Street, Sacramento, California (mailing address: P.O. Box 944272, Sacramento, CA 94244-2720). It was distributed under the provisions of the Library Distribution Act and Government Code Section 11096.

California English-Language Proficiency Assessment Project

Assembly Bill 748, enacted in 1997, requires that the test or tests assessing the progress of English learners toward achieving fluency in English be aligned with state standards for English-language development. The San Diego County Office of Education, under contract with the Standards and Assessment Division of the California Department of Education, named an advisory committee of state and national leaders to assist in the development of the English-language development (ELD) standards. A list of the California English-Language Proficiency Assessment Project advisory committee members and their affiliations follows:

- Adel Nadeau, Chair, San Diego County Office of Education
- Tim Allen, San Diego City Unified School District
- Bob Anderson, California Department of Education
- Nancy Brynelson, California Department of Education
- Frances Butler, Center for the Study of Evaluation, University of California, Los Angeles

Executive Summary

The following pages present a summary of the English-language development (ELD) standards for each domain (listening and speaking, reading, and writing). The summary is designed to give an overview of what students must know and be able to do as they move toward full fluency in English. The levels through which English learners progress are identified as beginning, intermediate, and advanced. For each ELD standard the summary indicates the English–language arts strand associated with it.

Summary

LISTENING AND SPEAKING

Strategies and Applications

English–language arts strand	Beginning ELD level*
Comprehension	Answer simple questions with one- to two-word responses. Respond to simple directions and questions by using physical actions and other means of nonverbal communication (e.g., matching objects, pointing to an answer, drawing pictures). Begin to speak with a few words or sentences by using a few standard English grammatical forms and sounds (e.g., single words or phrases). Use common social greetings and simple repetitive phrases independently (e.g., “Thank you,” “You’re welcome”). Ask and answer questions by using phrases or simple sentences. Retell stories by using appropriate gestures, expressions, and illustrative objects.
Organization and Delivery of Oral Communication	Begin to be understood when speaking, but usage of standard English grammatical forms and sounds (e.g., plurals, simple past tense, pronouns [he or she]) may be inconsistent. Orally communicate basic personal needs and desires (e.g., “May I go to the bathroom?”).
English–language arts strand	Intermediate ELD level*
Comprehension	Ask and answer instructional questions by using simple sentences. Listen attentively to stories and information and identify important details and concepts by using both verbal and nonverbal responses. Ask and answer instructional questions with some supporting elements (e.g., “Which part of the story was the most important?”).
Comprehension and Organization and Delivery of Oral Communication	Participate in social conversations with peers and adults on familiar topics by asking and answering questions and soliciting information.
Organization and Delivery of Oral Communication	Make oneself understood when speaking by using consistent standard English grammatical forms and sounds; however, some rules are not followed (e.g., third-person singular, male and female pronouns).

*The ELD standards must be applied appropriately for students in each grade level from kindergarten through grade twelve.

Introduction

The English–Language Arts Content Standards for California Public Schools (1998) and the Reading/Language Arts Framework for California Public Schools (1999), both adopted by the State Board of Education, define what all students in California, including students learning English as a second language, are expected to know and be able to do. The English-language development (ELD) standards are designed to supplement the English–language arts content standards to ensure that limited-English proficient (LEP) students (now called English learners in California) develop proficiency in both the English language and the concepts and skills contained in the English–language arts content standards.

The ELD standards were developed by a committee composed of 15 practitioners of and experts in English-language development and assessment. The standards are designed to assist teachers in moving English learners to fluency in English and proficiency in the English–language arts content standards. The ELD standards will also be used to develop the California English-Language Development Examinations. The standards were reviewed by teachers throughout California and were presented to the California State Board of Education in January 1999. After the State Board meeting in January, the draft standards were posted on the Internet for public comment. The standards were approved by the State Board during April 1999 contingent on some modifications and additions to better align the ELD standards with the English–language arts content standards that had been adopted by the State Board in January 1997. The State Board gave final approval to the ELD standards in July 1999.

The Reading/Language Arts Framework is based on the assumption that all students will attain proficiency in the English–language arts standards, but the framework also recognizes that not all learners will acquire skills and knowledge at the same rate. There are 1.4 million English learners in California. More than 40 percent of students in California speak a language other than English, and about 25 percent of students in California are not yet fluent in English. Those students enter school with language abilities very different from monolingual English-speaking students, who begin school with speaking vocabularies of between 2,000 and 8,000 words.

Generally, monolingual English speakers have mastered basic English sentence structures before entering school. English learners enter California public schools at all grade levels with limited or no knowledge of English vocabulary and sentence structure. Many of these children are unfamiliar with the Roman alphabet, and those who know the alphabet often have to learn new sounds for many of the letters. English learners need to catch up with the state’s monolingual English speakers. The ELD standards address the skills English learners must acquire in initial English learning to enable them to become proficient in the English–language arts standards.

The Reading/Language Arts Framework specifies that teachers must provide students with straightforward assessments of their proficiency in English at every stage of instruction so that students understand what to do to improve. The processes by which students develop proficiency in a second language differ from the experiences of monolingual English speakers. Grammatical structures that monolingual English speakers learn early in their language development may be learned much later by students learning English as a second language. Progress to full competency for English learners depends on the age at which a child begins learning English and the richness of the child’s English environment. The English-language development standards provide teachers with usable information to ensure that English-language development is occurring appropriately for all students, including English learners who enter school in:

- Kindergarten through grade two
- Grades three through twelve, literate in their primary language
- Grades three through twelve, not literate in their primary language

The ELD standards for grades three through twelve are designed for students who are literate in their primary language. Students who enter California schools in those grade levels not literate in their primary language need to be taught the ELD literacy standards for earlier grade levels, including those standards related to phonemic awareness, concepts of print, and decoding skills.

The Reading/Language Arts Framework addresses universal access to mastering the language arts standards. At each grade level suggestions are made to teachers for ensuring that the needs of English learners are addressed. The ELD standards encapsulate those suggestions by explicitly stating what all students need to know and be able to do as they learn English and move toward mastery of the English–language arts standards for their grade levels.

The ELD standards define the levels of proficiency required for an English learner to move through the levels of English–language development. The standards are designed to move all students, regardless of their instructional program, into the mainstream English–language arts curriculum. The levels of proficiency in a second language have been well documented through research, and the ELD standards were designed around those levels to provide teachers in all types of programs with clear benchmarks of progress. The ELD standards provide different academic pathways, which reflect critical developmental differences, for students who enter school at various grade levels.

The ELD standards are written as pathways to, or benchmarks of, the English–language arts standards. At the early proficiency levels, one ELD standard may be a pathway to attain several English–language arts standards. At the more advanced levels, the skills in the ELD standards begin to resemble those in the English–language arts standards and represent the standards at which an English learner has attained academic proficiency in English. The ELD standards integrate listening, speaking, reading, and writing and create a distinct pathway to reading in English rather than delaying the introduction of English reading.

All English learners, regardless of grade level or primary-language literacy level, must receive reading instruction in English.

English learners are to learn to read in English while they are acquiring oral English fluency. English learners in kindergarten through grade two are to demonstrate proficiency in the English–language arts standards of phonemic awareness, decoding, and concepts of print appropriate for their grade levels. These standards are embedded in the ELD standards. English learners in grades three through twelve must demonstrate proficiency in those essential beginning reading skills by the time they reach the early intermediate level of the ELD standards. This expectation holds true for students who enter school regardless of whether they are literate or not literate in their primary language.

The ELD standards may be used as criteria to develop the entry-level assessments and the assessments to monitor student progress called for in the Reading/Language Arts Framework.

English learners working at the advanced level of the ELD standards are to demonstrate proficiency in the English–language arts standards for their grade level and for all prior grade levels. This expectation means that English learners must acquire prerequisite skills at earlier proficiency levels.

Teachers are to monitor the students' acquisition of English and provide correction so that kindergarten students working at the advanced ELD level and students in all other grades working at the early advanced level will have internalized English–language skills to such a degree that the teacher will often observe the students correcting their own grammar, usage, and word choices in speaking, reading, and writing.

English-Language Development Standards

The ELD standards are designed to assist classroom teachers in assessing the progress of English learners toward attaining full fluency in English. The strategies used to help students attain proficiency in English differ according to the age at which a student begins learning English; therefore, the standards include outcomes for students who begin learning English in kindergarten through grade two, grades three through five, grades six through eight, and grades nine through twelve. The standards in those grade ranges were developed to help teachers move English learners to full fluency in English and to proficiency in the English-language arts standards. English learners at the advanced level of the ELD standards are to demonstrate proficiency in all standards detailed in this document and all language arts standards for the grades in which they are enrolled. English learners at the intermemediate level of these ELD standards should be able to demonstrate proficiency in the language arts standards for all prior grade levels. Teachers will need to work concurrently with this document and the English-Language Arts Content Standards for California Public Schools, Kindergarten Through Grade Twelve (1998) to ensure that English learners achieve proficiency.

The ELD standards are comprehensive, with more detailed proficiency levels than were included in the Executive Summary. This refinement is needed so that teachers can better assess the progress of their students. The proficiency levels are as follows:

- Beginning
- Early intermediate
- Intermediate
- Early advanced
- Advanced

LISTENING AND SPEAKING

Strategies and Applications

The listening and speaking standards for English learners identify a student's competency to understand the English language and to produce the language orally. Students must be prepared to use English effectively in social and academic settings. Listening and speaking skills provide one of the most important building blocks for the foundation of second-language acquisition and are essential for developing reading and writing skills in English. To develop proficiency in listening, speaking, reading, and writing, students must receive instruction in reading and writing while developing fluency in oral English.

Teachers must use both the ELD and the English–language arts standards to ensure that English learners develop proficiency in listening and speaking and acquire the concepts in the English–language arts standards. English learners achieving at the advanced level of the ELD standards should demonstrate proficiency in the language arts standards at their own grade level and at all prior grade levels. This expectation means that by the early advanced ELD level, all prerequisite skills needed to achieve the level of skills in the English–language arts standards must have been learned. English learners must develop both fluency in English and proficiency in the language arts standards. Teachers must ensure that English learners receive instruction in listening and speaking that will enable them to meet the speaking applications standards of the language arts standards.

Word Analysis

For all students, developing skills in reading English begins with a solid understanding of the relationships between English sounds and letters—the relationships between the spoken and written language. For the English learner those concepts are first developed through the recognition and production of English sounds. Students need to learn first those sounds that exist and then those that do not exist in their first language. Students then are taught to transfer this knowledge to the printed language. As students develop knowledge of the correspondence between sounds and printed symbols, they also develop skills to deal with English morphemes (e.g., prefixes, suffixes, root words). Those word-analysis skills are some of the building blocks students need to develop fluency in English and literacy skills.

Native speakers of English are expected to recognize and produce all the English sounds by no later than first grade. This knowledge is then used in phonics instruction when children learn to match the English sounds with printed letters and use this knowledge to decode and encode words. English learners in kindergarten through grade two are to demonstrate proficiency in those English–language arts standards pertaining to phonemic awareness, concepts about print, and decoding standards appropriate for their grade levels by the time they reach the advanced level of the ELD standards.

Because the English–language arts standards are essential for all students learning to read in English, English learners in grades three through twelve should be proficient in those standards related to phonemic awareness, concepts about print, and decoding no later than at the early intermediate level. Except where it is necessary for instruction to use nonsense words for teaching and assessing students, such as in phonemic awareness and early decoding instruction, care should be taken to ensure that students work with vocabulary and concepts that are meaningful and understandable to them.

For kindergarten through grade two, the English–language arts standards pertaining to phonemic awareness, concepts about print, and decoding/word recognition have been incorporated into the ELD standards. Those language arts standards serve as signs of whether English learners are making appropriate progress toward becoming proficient readers. The ELD standards indicate the grade span in which students are to demonstrate proficiency, the language arts substrand, and the number of the targeted language arts standard. Nonreaders of any age must move through the same sequence of skills when learning to read. Therefore, the instructional sequence for kindergarten through grade two should be used as a guide for English-language development and reading instruction at all grade levels.

The instructional sequence for teaching phonemic awareness, concepts about print, and decoding skills is more specific in the kindergarten-through-grade-two span because the language arts standards for those grades focus primarily on developing literacy fluency. In grades three through twelve, students must greatly increase their content knowledge while learning English literacy skills. Older students with properly sequenced instruction may achieve literacy more rapidly than very young children do.

In the ELD standards pathways are provided that enable students of all ages to build literacy skills. The language arts standards for grades three through twelve have linking ELD standards in each grade span that are designed to help students achieve proficiency in their grade-level language arts standards by the time they reach the advanced level of the ELD standards. Students at the advanced level in ELD are expected to demonstrate proficiency in the language arts standards for their own grade and for all prior grades.

One reason for incorporating the language arts standards for kindergarten through grade two into the ELD standards is to clarify a point: Kindergarten and first-grade students at the advanced level in the ELD standards are also expected to be proficient in the language arts standards for their grade level. No limited-English-proficient student is expected to learn the language arts standards beyond his or her grade level.

READING

Fluency and Systematic Vocabulary Development

As the English learner recognizes and produces the sounds of English, the student is simultaneously building vocabulary. Learning new labels for concepts, objects, and actions is a key building block for the integration of the language. The pathways in the English-language development (ELD) standards lead to the achievement of fluent oral and silent reading. Those pathways are created by building vocabulary and are demonstrated through actions and spoken words, phrases, and sentences and by transferring this understanding to reading. The successful learning of a second language requires that the instruction of students be highly integrated to include all language skills and challenging activities that focus on subject-matter content (Brinton, Snow, and Wesche 1989). Therefore, at the higher proficiency levels, the student is asked to apply knowledge of vocabulary to literature and subject-matter texts and achieve an appropriate level of independent reading.

At the lower ELD proficiency levels, reading materials should be at the student's developmental level. Grade-level reading materials should be used with students working at the advanced level. In addition to demonstrating proficiency in the ELD standards, students at the advanced level must also demonstrate proficiency in the English–language arts standards at their own grade level and at all prior grade levels. To ensure each student's success, schools must offer instruction leading to proficiency in the language arts standards. Instruction must begin as early as possible within the framework of the ELD standards. To ensure that all English learners achieve proficiency in the language arts standards, teachers must concurrently use both documents: the English–language arts standards and the ELD standards.

Reading Comprehension

Reading comprehension and literary response and analysis are the two pathways of the ELD standards that lead to mastery of the academic content of the language arts standards. The English learner requires instruction in which listening, speaking, reading, and writing are presented in an integrated format. The ELD standards vary according to the grade level and the age of the student: early childhood (ages five to seven years), middle childhood (ages eight to ten years), and young adult (ages eleven to sixteen years). The speed of acquisition of academic language in English differs within those three groups (Collier 1992). Older children and adults, over the short term, proceed more quickly through the very early stages of syntactical and morphological development (Scarcella and Oxford 1992). Young children proceed less quickly, but in the long run they achieve higher levels of proficiency in a second language than do older children and adults. The influence of age is most evident with younger children who are able to learn a second language and speaking that language with natively like fluency and pronunciation (Selinker 1972). Younger children exhibit few of the inappropriate (e.g., phonological, syntactical, or morphological) forms of the second language that often are problematic for older children and adults and that require extensive remediation.

When English learners reach the advanced level of the ELD standards, they must also be able to demonstrate proficiency in the language arts standards for their current grade level and all prior grade levels. Students at the advanced level of the ELD standards must use grade-level texts; however, students working at lower levels should use reading materials appropriate for their developmental levels. To ensure that English learners become proficient in both the ELD and the language arts standards, teachers must use the two standards documents concurrently and provide instruction leading to proficiency in the language arts standards at a level no later than the intermediate level of the ELD standards.

Literary Response and Analysis

For English learners to improve their English skills and reduce the likelihood that those skills will level off before the students reach fluency, they need to learn academic content along with language skills. Instruction in academic areas, such as literature, mathematics, geography, history, government, and science, not only familiarizes learners with the content of the discipline, but also, what is more important, teaches them how to use the language required to communicate in the discipline (Mohan 1986). English learners at all fluency levels are highly motivated by instruction in academic subjects. They immediately see the value of learning to use English to meet their everyday needs and to help them succeed in school as they learn how to communicate in an academic area (Snow, Met, and Genesee 1989). Students whose English is not quite fluent may be motivated to work harder to develop English fluency so that they can communicate successfully in an academic area that they think may be important in their future.

Learning the reading, writing, speaking, and listening skills necessary to achieve English fluency is critical for English learners. Achieving fluency requires learning the basic structure of English (Gass and Selinker 1994). Literature is a critical component for developing fluency in English. Through literature the students are exposed to a broader range of English grammatical constructions and usage than they will generally experience in listening and speaking. Reading and responding to literature are also vehicles through which all students, including English learners, develop rich vocabularies. Teachers will frequently give students writing assignments for which they use literature as a model to produce an independent piece of writing. As English learners study literature, the opportunities increase for them to understand various literary features and use them in their own writing. This development in turn will enable them to move toward demonstrating proficiency in all the English–language arts standards.

At the lower ELD proficiency levels, reading materials should be at students' developmental proficiency level. Grade-level reading materials should be used with students who work at the advanced level. Students working at the advanced level of the ELD standards should also demonstrate proficiency in “Literary Response and Analysis” skills of the English–language arts standards. To ensure that students develop proficiency in both the ELD and the language arts standards, teachers must work concurrently with the two standards documents and the Reading/Language Arts Framework (1999).

WRITING

Strategies and Applications

As English learners begin to develop language skills in listening, speaking, and reading, they also need to develop writing skills. Linguistic studies note that English learners will transfer language skills from their primary language to English (Odlin 1989), especially if similarities between English and the primary language exist and if students are substantially literate in their primary language. Research also indicates that integrating the four language skills (reading, writing, speaking, and listening) is crucial for English learners to develop the ability to write effectively (Mangeldorf 1989).

Reading is particularly important because it provides English learners with opportunities to acquire grammar, expand vocabulary, gain increasing fluency with written texts, and improve speaking skills (Interactive Approaches to Second Language Reading 1988). Reading provides students with model sentence patterns and linguistic structures. However, improved writing does not necessarily follow from reading. For English learners to apply their knowledge of sentence patterns and linguistic structures, they must put into practice what they observe from reading by engaging in various types of writing. If these students are to become successful users of English, their integrated instructional program must include numerous opportunities to develop writing skills.

Because English learners working at the advanced level of the ELD standards are also expected to demonstrate proficiency in the language arts standards, it is essential for teachers to use the two standards documents concurrently and to monitor students' progress on both sets of standards.

WRITING

English-Language Conventions

The ELD standards identify the stages that English learners must pass through to use the conventions of English effectively in writing. Depending on the degree to which their primary language differs from English in its written form and the degree to which students are already proficient writers in their primary language, English learners face unique challenges as they work to successfully use the conventions of written English.

At all ELD proficiency levels, English learners are to produce writing that includes correct capitalization, punctuation, and spelling of words appropriate to the students' developing fluency in English. By the advanced level, the students are to demonstrate proficiency in both the ELD and the language arts standards for their current grade level and for all prior grade levels.

Glossary

affix	A word part that changes the meaning or function of a root or stem word to which it is attached.
alliteration	The occurrence in a phrase, line of speech, or writing of two or more words with the same initial sound.
cognates	Words in different languages related to the same root (e.g., education in English, educación in Spanish).
false cognates	Words from different languages that sound alike and are similar in form but are unrelated in meaning (e.g., éxito in Spanish means “success”).
independent reading	The student reads text independently without the assistance of the teacher or other adult/tutor. The student also makes reading selections independently (e.g., from the classroom shelf, school library, or public library).
morphemes	Refers to the smallest unit of meaningful sound in language (i.e., words or affixes). There are two classes of morphemes: bound and free. Bound morphemes are meaning units that can never be a word by themselves (e.g., prefixes such as re in redo or suffixes such as ment in establishment). Free morphemes are equivalent to words (e.g., table, school, pencil).
phonemes	Smallest units of sound in language that are used to contrast words and the morphemes that make up words. Each language has a unique set of sounds, and English learners must master these sounds to a certain level of proficiency to understand English or orally communicate in English. Generally, older children and adults do not achieve full mastery of the production of these sounds and consequently speak English with an accent.
phonics	A system of teaching initial reading and spelling that stresses basic sound–symbol relationships and their application in decoding words.
